7. ORAL COMMUNICATIONS:

Ms. Audrey Lord-Hausman spoke concerning the lack of accommodations and features for the elderly or those with disabilities in new housing developments, such as Grand Marina. She stated that houses are two and three stories high with stairs that make it impractical for the disabled or elderly to purchase such homes. Ms. Lord-Hausman also stated that the Census figures indicated there were 12,000 citizens in Alameda with a disability. She stated that one of the desirable aspects of Alameda are the multiple generations that live here. She urged the Planning Board to consider housing designs that provide accommodations for the elderly and those with disabilities when reviewing large housing developments.

President Ezzy Ashcraft asked if any developers had included elevators in their homes in an effort to provide accommodations to those with limited mobility and noted this allowed such developers to maximize land use because building footprints could be made smaller.

Ms. Lord-Hausman responded yes.

Board member Cook agreed with Ms. Lord-Hausman's comments and suggested that the Planning Board consider the type of housing when reviewing a project site plan.

Board member Lynch stated that due to the cost of land fewer single-story or ranch style homes have been built in the recent past. He added that a stacked design concept with the master bedroom on the ground floor with the kitchen and other living space on the upper levels has become a popular method of providing accessibility and a floor plan that takes the needs of seniors into consideration.

Board member Cunningham stated that an ordinance amendment may be a way to put require consideration of alternative floor plans.

The Planning Services Manager stated this could be looked into but with land values in the Bay Area so high, it might be viewed as an impediment to housing development like the inclusionary housing requirements for affordable housing.

Board member Lynch mentioned a concept called “aging in place” and agreed that there is a lack of housing in Alameda for the elderly.

Board member Kohlstrand commented she would like to see developers that include duplexes as part of their project, such as the Boatworks, consider making these units stacked like flats so that housing opportunities for seniors and those with disabilities are provided.
